Fears of a global recession surfaced again as PMIs showed moderation in manufacturing activity in Europe, US and China amidst muted demand and high inflation. Germany's retail sales fell by a record 8.8% in Jun'22 (YoY) exacerbating these concerns. As a result, oil prices declined sharply by 9.1%. Further, expectations of a possible flare up in tensions between US and China ahead of US House of Representative Speaker's visit to Taiwan kept investors on edge. In India, strong manufacturing PMI data and lower oil prices buoyed investor sentiments.

- Global indices ended mixed. While Asian stocks ended largely higher, stocks in US and UK edged down. Disappointing manufacturing PMI data from US, China and Europe impacted investor sentiments. Sensex consolidated its gains and rose by another 0.9%, led by gains in power and auto stocks. However it is trading lower today in line with other Asian stocks.

- Barring CNY (lower), other global currencies edged up. DXY declined by another 0.4% in line with a fall in US 10Y yield. Disappointing ISM manufacturing PMI also drove DXY lower. GBP rose by 0.6% ahead of BoE policy meet. INR appreciated by 0.3%, supported by lower oil prices and FPI inflows. It is trading further stronger today, in line with other Asian currencies.

- Except Japan (flat), other global yields closed lower. US 10Y yield fell the most by 8bps, followed by UK (6bps) and Germany (4bps). Muted manufacturing activity from Europe to Asia as seen in the PMI print for Jul'22, drop in retail sales in Germany and falling construction spending in the US added to woes.

India's 10Y yield fell by 8bps to 7.24% as crude prices dropped. Expectations that a new 10Y security may be issued also impacted market sentiments. It is trading at 7.2% today.
